PARADE STAGED

As the marchers passed the city power house the whistle gave several long blasts advising the public of the approach of the klansmen. On passing the flag pole in the center of town halted, facing out, and the remainder of the marchers went on a block north, turned and came back to line up with the twenty-four The Texhoma band was lined up at this point and played several selections. A tall Klansman stepped out and requested the band leader to play America and all of the marchers joined in singing one verse of that song. The march was then resumed and the white figures disappeared to the south. marching two abreast. Conspicuous in the parade were numerous banners such as "We stand for the Constitution of the United States," "Bootleggers and Gamblers Must Go," "Ten Members in the Crowd to One in the Parade," "Joyride With Your Own Wife," and numerous other banners somewhat similar, all indicating that the Klansman stand for what is right. There was no disorder, no boisterous conduct on the sidelines and the parade proceeded unmolested from start to finish .--Guymon Tribune.

Sole leather made of shark skin is the latest cure of cold feet for traffic officers on Seattle's street intersections. Many traffic men, complaining during rains weather that rubber and ordinary leather caused cold feet, have experimented in various ways to remedy the condition. Some tried moose hide, walrus skin and wooden shoes of the Orient, but the use of shark's leather proved successful. With this waterproof material, comfortable light shoes are made, which, excluding dampness, possess an element conserving the natural body heat within the shoe so fitted.
